This overview provides information about the major municipal borrowers in the State of Connecticut and the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and their bond programs. The borrowers described in this guide include some of the most established and recognized issuers in the municipal market, as well as issuers of bonds under programs that have been established more recently. They reflect the largest and most active issuers in the two states, and encompass various types of debt. In many cases, a single borrower may issue debt under multiple programs that are each repaid with a different revenue source; most of the significant active bond programs are covered for these borrowers. While underlying ratings are shown, individual series or maturities within each of the bond programs may be insured and may not have underlying ratings.

Introduction

This introduction is intended to provide an overview of the long-term economic and fiscal developments taking place in the State of Connecticut and in the Commonwealth Massachusetts. Several factors are weighed and counterbalanced when determining these long-term trends. In terms of the economy, unemployment, job creation, and industry diversity are considered. Trends in the tax base are examined by looking at per capita income, tax burden, and shifts in adjusted gross income into and out of the two states. Finally, trends in the states’ fiscal positions are presented in terms of liabilities and reserves.

Of the 50 state economies, Connecticut and Massachusetts rank 1st and 2nd largest, respectively, as measured by per capita personal income from all industries. While both state economies have seen earnings from the finance and insurance industry contribute to a larger than average share of the total, Massachusetts has been more successful at diversifying its economy away from this historically more volatile sector. The last year in which the two states had the same contribution from finance and insurance was 1969. In recent years, Connecticut’s peaked in 2010 at 19% and declined to 15% in 2020, while Massachusetts’ peaked the same year at 13% and was 9% in 2020, compared to 7% nationally. The measure of the states’ overall economic diversity may be derived using the Hachman Index. This is an index of similarity that measures how closely industry earnings of the subject region (Connecticut or Massachusetts) resembles that of the reference region (United States). The value of the index is between zero and one. As the value of the index approaches one, this means that the subject region's employment distribution among industries is more similar to that of the reference region. If the reference region is the nation, and, given the assumption that the nation's economy is diversified, a larger Hachman Index value means that a subject region is more diversified (and therefore less specialized). In 2020, both Connecticut and Massachusetts had a Hachman Index value of 0.88, indicating that both states were near the middle of the distribution, which is described by a median of 0.88 for all states. Both states have experienced a decline in the share of income earned from the manufacturing sector since the 1950s, when that was the largest sector for the two states and significantly above the nation as a whole. In 2020, Connecticut’s retained manufacturing industry at 11% was still above the national average of 9%, while in Massachusetts that sector represented less than the average at 7%. Service industries have displaced manufacturing as drivers of personal income growth, although more so in Massachusetts than in Connecticut. The finance and insurance and the manufacturing sectors were the largest in terms of personal income from non-government sectors in Connecticut, although healthcare was a close third, while professional services and healthcare were the largest in Massachusetts.

The charts on the following page illustrate the trends in the states’ economic diversity (Hachman Index), and in the four largest non-government sector industries in terms of personal income in 2020.

Connecticut had a lower unemployment rate than Massachusetts in nearly three-quarters of all years from 1976 to 2009, but in the 11 years since Connecticut’s has been higher in all but the recession year 2020 – a development that may indicate that structural changes in certain private employment sectors have occurred between the two states since 2009. However, prior to 2009, in years around national economic recessions Massachusetts’ unemployment rate increased at a faster pace than Connecticut’s, and the most recent data show that was indeed the case in 2020 as well. Connecticut’s average unemployment rate in 2020 was 7.9% compared to 9.0% for Massachusetts.

Another measure of employment health comes from the Census Bureau's Business Dynamics Statistics, which contains the results of a census of business establishments and firms in the U.S. The census includes measures of establishment openings and closings, firm startups, job creation and destruction by firm size, age, and industrial sector, and several other statistics on business dynamics. One such measure is the net job creation rate, which considers gross job creation and gross job destruction figures within a year’s period, in order to find net job creation rates among businesses of all sizes within each state. Like all aggregate economic statistics, the net job creation rate is not without its flaws, as it fails to capture the quality of jobs being destroyed and created. However, it may be useful in assessing the general trend of business dynamism within a state. The net job creation rates for Connecticut and Massachusetts averaged 1.17% and 1.67%, respectively, in the 32-year period ending 2008. However, from 2009 through the most current year of the survey (2018), Connecticut’s annual average net job creation rate dropped to 0.02%, while the annual average rate for Massachusetts was 0.91%.

The unemployment rate and net job creation statistics may indicate that Massachusetts has maintained a more dynamic business climate, one that has enabled the state to better adjust to changes taking place in the broader economy and better suited to take advantage of any structural labor market changes that have taken place since 2008.

The charts on the following page illustrate the trend in the states’ unemployment and net job creation rates.

Introduction

Connecticut and Massachusetts are wealthy states, having ranked first and second highest in per capita personal income (PCPI) in 2020, respectively. Connecticut had experienced an upward sloping trend in PCPI when compared to the nation until it peaked at 153% in 2010. Since then, it has steadily declined to 134% in 2020, the lowest level since 1991. The upward trend in Massachusetts’ PCPI has been more consistent, having ended at 133% relative to the nation in 2020, or at its highest level since at least 1977. The recent trend in PCPI for the two states narrowed the gap to the smallest difference since at least 1977.

Massachusetts’ personal tax burden was very close to the national median in 2020, or close to where it has been relative to the nation over the past decade. Connecticut’s personal tax burden, on the other hand, has been consistently above the national median over the past decade. The state personal tax burden is calculated by taking total state tax revenue excluding corporate income and severance taxes divided by total state personal income excluding federal transfer receipts. Importantly, the state personal tax burden does not include local taxes such as property taxes. Connecticut residents were subject to a 6.6% state personal tax burden and Massachusetts residents to a 6.1% rate; the 2020 median for U.S. states was 6.1%. Connecticut’s state personal tax burden increased substantially from the late 1970s through the mid 1990s and has generally been more volatile than Massachusetts’, which has exhibited a generally downward trend since the mid 1990s along with the national median.

Higher living costs and changing demographics in the two states may be pressuring their tax bases, which have exhibited outmigration in terms of shifts in adjusted gross income (AGI). Looking solely at changes in a state’s population may provide limited value in this regard because it does not directly measure changes in the tax base. Rather, the migration of AGI between and among the states provides a more accurate measure of the trend in a state’s tax base. The Statistics of Income Division of the IRS maintains records of all individual income tax forms filed in each year, including the state of residence of the filers. The data used to produce the migration statistics come from individual income tax returns and represent between 95% and 98% of total annual filings. One gauge of the degree of movement in a state’s tax base is the extent to which it is on the sending or receiving end of AGI migration. The net dollar flow of AGI between Connecticut and Massachusetts and other states, as well as the number of inflows received from and outflows sent to every other state, provide a good indication of how the two states’ tax bases are changing. Since the 1992-1993 period, growth in the tax base for Massachusetts has kept the net dollar flow of AGI within a range of -1.0% and -0.2% of the tax base. For the most recent 2018-2019 period the net dollar flow of AGI as a percent of the tax base for Massachusetts was -0.5%, close to its long-term average of -0.4%. For Connecticut, the most recent figure was -1.0%, which was above the average of -0.7%. Additionally, for the most recent period, the states lost part of their tax bases to 46 and 30 other states, respectively – meaning that Connecticut had a net inflow from only 4 states, and Massachusetts was more evenly balanced with a net inflow from 20. The charts on the following pages illustrate the trend in the states’ per capita personal income, state personal tax burden, and tax base.

Connecticut’s and Massachusetts’ wealthy tax bases have enabled the states to support large debt burdens. Total net tax supported debt (NTSD) of $24.8 billion in Connecticut and $43.7 billion in Massachusetts rank them 6th and 3rd highest among states, respectively. At 8.7% and 7.8% of personal income their NTSDs rank 2nd and 3rd, respectively, and significantly above the 1.9% U.S. state median. Part of the explanation for their high debt levels may be attributed to the financing of projects that in other states are financed at the local level. Nevertheless, their debt burdens are high in addition to having large unfunded pension system liabilities. Connecticut’s Moody’s adjusted net pension liability (ANPL) was $74 billion in 2020. Massachusetts’ ANPL was $77.1 billion. Neither state has a history of maintaining strong pension funding levels, although both have enacted recent reforms even though material near-term progress is not expected. Going forward, both states have committed to fully funding their actuarially required contribution (ARC) amounts. Most states do not annually set aside 100% of their other post employment benefits (OPEB) ARC, and Connecticut and Massachusetts are not different in this respect. Both states have incurred substantial OPEB commitments, with Connecticut’s Moody’s adjusted net OPEB liability (ANOL) at $23 billion and Massachusetts’ at $14 billion. Taken together with NTSD and ANPL, total liabilities represented 38% of Connecticut’s state GDP and 23% of Massachusetts’ state GDP.

One measure of a state’s financial flexibility is its unrestricted reserves and rainy-day fund balances. At fiscal year end 2020, Connecticut had unrestricted reserves in its general fund of negative $1.1 billion, and a committed rainy-day fund balance of $3.0 billion; the combined balance equated to 10.4% of general fund expenditures, the highest level since at least 1995. Massachusetts had unrestricted reserves in its general fund of $1.7 billion, and a committed rainy-day fund balance of $3.5 billion, resulting in a combined balance of 12.6% of general fund expenditures.

The charts on the following page illustrate the trend in the states’ NTSD and reserve levels.

In general, the bond market is volatile, and fixed income securities carry interest rate risk. (As interest rates rise, bond prices usually fall, and vice versa. This effect is usually more pronounced for longer-term securities). Fixed income securities also carry inflation risk, liquidity risk, call risk and credit and default risks for both issuers and counterparties. Lower-quality fixed income securities involve greater risk of default or price changes due to potential changes in the credit quality of the issuer. Any fixed-income security sold or redeemed prior to maturity may be subject to loss.

Diversification does not ensure a profit or guarantee against a loss. Interest income earned from tax-exempt municipal securities generally is exempt from federal income tax, and may also be exempt from state and local income taxes if you are a resident in the state of issuance. A portion of the income you receive may be subject to federal and state income taxes, including the federal alternative minimum tax. In addition, you may be subject to tax on amounts recognized in connection with the sale of municipal bonds, including capital gains and “market discount” taxed at ordinary income rates. “Market discount” arises when a bond is purchased on the secondary market for a price that is less than its stated redemption price by more than a statutory amount. Before making any investment, you should review the official statement for the relevant offering for additional tax and other considerations.

The municipal market can be adversely affected by tax, legislative, or political changes and the financial condition of the issuers of municipal securities. Investing in municipal bonds for the purpose of generating tax-exempt income may not be appropriate for investors in all tax brackets or for all account types. Tax laws are subject to change and the preferential tax treatment of municipal bond interest income may be revoked or phased out for investors at certain income levels. You should consult your tax adviser regarding your specific situation.

Investing in municipal Bonds for the purpose of generating tax-exempt income is generally more beneficial the higher an investor’s tax bracket. Tax-advantaged accounts such as IRAs and 401(k)s are generally not appropriate for holding tax-exempt municipal securities.
