

November, 2018

Q1: I understand Fidelity is making significant changes to its index funds for individual investors, financial advisors and institutional investors. What can you tell me?

A: Fidelity is simplifying and lowering the price on Fidelity Index mutual funds for individual investors, financial advisors and institutional investors: In addition to offering the industry's first self-indexed mutual funds with a zero expense ratio available to individual investors, total expenses on 21 of Fidelity's stock and bond index mutual funds will be reduced and the funds will be simplified by offering the single lowest-cost share class to all investors (regardless of investment size). The expense reductions are expected to save current Fidelity index fund shareholders approximately $47 million annually,<sup>i</sup> and are effective immediately. The consolidation of share classes to a single low-cost share class is expected to take place in early November. Shareholders will receive additional details in the coming months.

Q2: What are the Fidelity index fund expense reductions and single share class consolidations?

A: We have both simplified and provided greater value to individual investors by reducing the expenses to the lowest cost share class available for 21 different funds. This means individual investors and financial advisors are now being offered the same expense levels that were formerly only available to large institutional clients. Additionally, for Fidelity Small Cap Index Fund and Fidelity Mid Cap Index Fund, we have further reduced expenses to 0.025% (2.5 basis points).

To drive simplicity, we will also be consolidating all share classes into the one, lowest priced share classes (this will be implemented in November) See Appendix A for full list of funds and the new total net expenses.

Q3: What do these changes mean?

A: These changes mean that investors will see a significant cost savings on their index mutual fund expenses, and the consolidation to a single share class simplifies the investment choice to one low-cost index fund.

When we say significant cost savings, we mean:

- Investors will get exposure to the lowest share class available regardless of how much they invest, benefitting from Fidelity scale. Importantly, in every case, the changes Fidelity has made means Fidelity's index funds have lower expense ratios than Vanguard. The average asset-weighted annual expenses across Fidelity's stock and bond index fund line-up will decrease by 35% to 0.029%.
- The expense reductions are expected to save current Fidelity index fund shareholders approximately $47 million annually<sup>ii</sup>.

Additionally, because all share classes will be priced the same, the multiple share classes will be eliminated, and the ticker associated with your fund may change. For example, if you own

Fidelity 500 Index Fund - Premium Class, its name will be simplified to Fidelity 500 index Fund, and its ticker will change from FUSVX to FXAIX.

Q4: Why did you lower expenses on your index funds?

A: Simple, for the benefit of our clients-- whether they invest directly with Fidelity or through a financial advisor or the workplace. Fidelity has a proud history of driving new innovation and value to benefit investors and to simplify investing. Americans are working hard to save for their futures and we believe investing is an essential tool for success. Lower expenses across our stock and bond index funds means more of an investor's money can be invested directly toward their distinct financial goals. And while price is just one piece of a superior customer experience, for index fund investors focused on cost, there's no need to look further than Fidelity. In addition, all investors - from millennials to boomers; from people just starting out to people who have saved millions -benefit from these changes and are treated the same.

Q5: When do the changes take effect?

A: The reduced fund expenses are available as of 08/01/2018, regardless of what option an investor selects, and the share class consolidation are expected to occur in early November.

Q6: Is there anything I need to do to take advantage of these changes?

A: No. The price reductions have already gone into effect and share class conversion will happen automatically. Existing shareholder will be notified in advance if the ticker on their fund is changing.

Q7: Are there any changes to the investment policies of the funds?

A: No, there are no changes to the investment policies of the funds. The funds will track the same benchmarks and provide the same exposures to the market. Initially, the only change to the shareholder is the reduction of fees. Once the share class consolidation takes place investors, except for those in the surviving share class, will see an adjustment to the number of shares in their account because each of the share classes has a slightly different net asset value (NAV). Although the number of shares a customer owns will most likely change, the total value of their holdings will not change as a result of the share class conversions. Each shareholder will receive the number of full and fractional shares of the surviving class equal in value to the net asset value of shares of converting class held by such shareholder on the conversion date.

Q8: Are there any tax impacts?

A: There are no tax implications associated with the changes.

Q9: Will these changes be reflected in the affected funds' prospectuses?

A: Prospectus updates are not immediately required for these changes. Prospectuses will be updated during the next annual revision cycle, the timing of which is different depending on the fund's trust. The chart below details when the changes will be updated in each funds' prospectus. Please note the prospectus changes occur two months after the end of the fund's fiscal year.
